The Chester Moffett House was built by Asahel and Benjamin Mastic in 1826, and was sold to Chester Moffett in 1832. The house and farm is now owned by King Wilmot, great, great, great grandson of Chester Moffett, and is now occupied by a tenant.

The central part of the house is two stories with north and south wings of one story each.

It is of wood construction with stone foundation, and has an entrance doorway of very good design. The entire structure is badly weather-beaten and in a state of decay.

The data regarding ownership was furnished by Charles Wilmot, great, great grandson of Chester Moffett.
